Reuters: Merkel will Vorratsdatenspeicherung

von Markus Beckedahl am 14. Januar 2015, 14:10 in Kurzmeldungen / 15 Kommentare

Reuters zitiert informierte Unions-Kreise, dass sich Merkel für die Wiedereinführung der Vorratsdatenspeicherung ausspreche: Merkel besteht auf Umsetzung der Vorratsdatenspeicherung.

In der Sitzung der CDU/CSU-Bundestagfraktion sagte die Kanzlerin nach Teilnehmerangaben am Dienstag in Berlin, dass sie eine solche Regelung für eine längere Speicherung von Kommunikationsdaten wolle. Diese sei auch nicht verfassungswidrig, fügte Merkel hinzu.

Inhaltsdaten!

- „The [french] prime minister also spoke of passing an updated version of a 2013 surveillance law that reportedly allows French intelligence officials to inspect residents' emails, phone calls, location data, Internet activity and more for vague purposes including "national security" and stopping terrorist activity.

Und Cameron so:

"In our country, do we want to allow a means of communication between people which we cannot read"?

David Cameron pledges new 'snoopers' charter if he wins general election

David Cameron in 'cloud cuckoo land' over encrypted messaging apps ban

The prime minister's pledge to give security services access to encrypted communications is 'crazy', experts say

Cameron will also Privatsphäre verbieten!

Mehr Überwachung bringt nicht zwingend mehr Sicherheit

The Impact of Mass Surveillance on International Writers

Results from PEN's International
Survey of Writers
January 5, 2014

PEN free expression,
AMERICA literature

A. Writers living in both Free and Not Free countries have avoided writing or speaking on a particular topic, or have seriously considered it, due to fear of government surveillance, including:

*34% of writers in
Free countries*

*44% of writers in
Partly Free countries*

61% of writers in Not Free countries

B. Writers living in both Free and Not Free countries have curtailed or avoided activities on social media, or seriously considered it, due to fear of government surveillance, including:

42% of writers in Free countries

46% of writers in Partly Free countries

53% of writers in Not Free countries

In comparison, 40% of U.S. writers surveyed by PEN in October 2013 reported curtailing or avoiding activities on social media, or seriously considering doing so.<sup>17</sup>

In next week's State of the Union address, President Obama will propose new laws against hacking that could make either retweeting or clicking on the above (fictional) link illegal. The new laws make it a felony to intentionally access unauthorized information even if it's been posted to a public website. The new laws make it a felony to traffic in information like passwords, where "trafficking" includes posting a link.

The biggest threat to French free speech isn't terrorism. It's the government.

The murders at Charlie Hebdo, while tragic, aren't the problem.
